

SECURIKETT®

Why a Simple Seal
isn't enough....

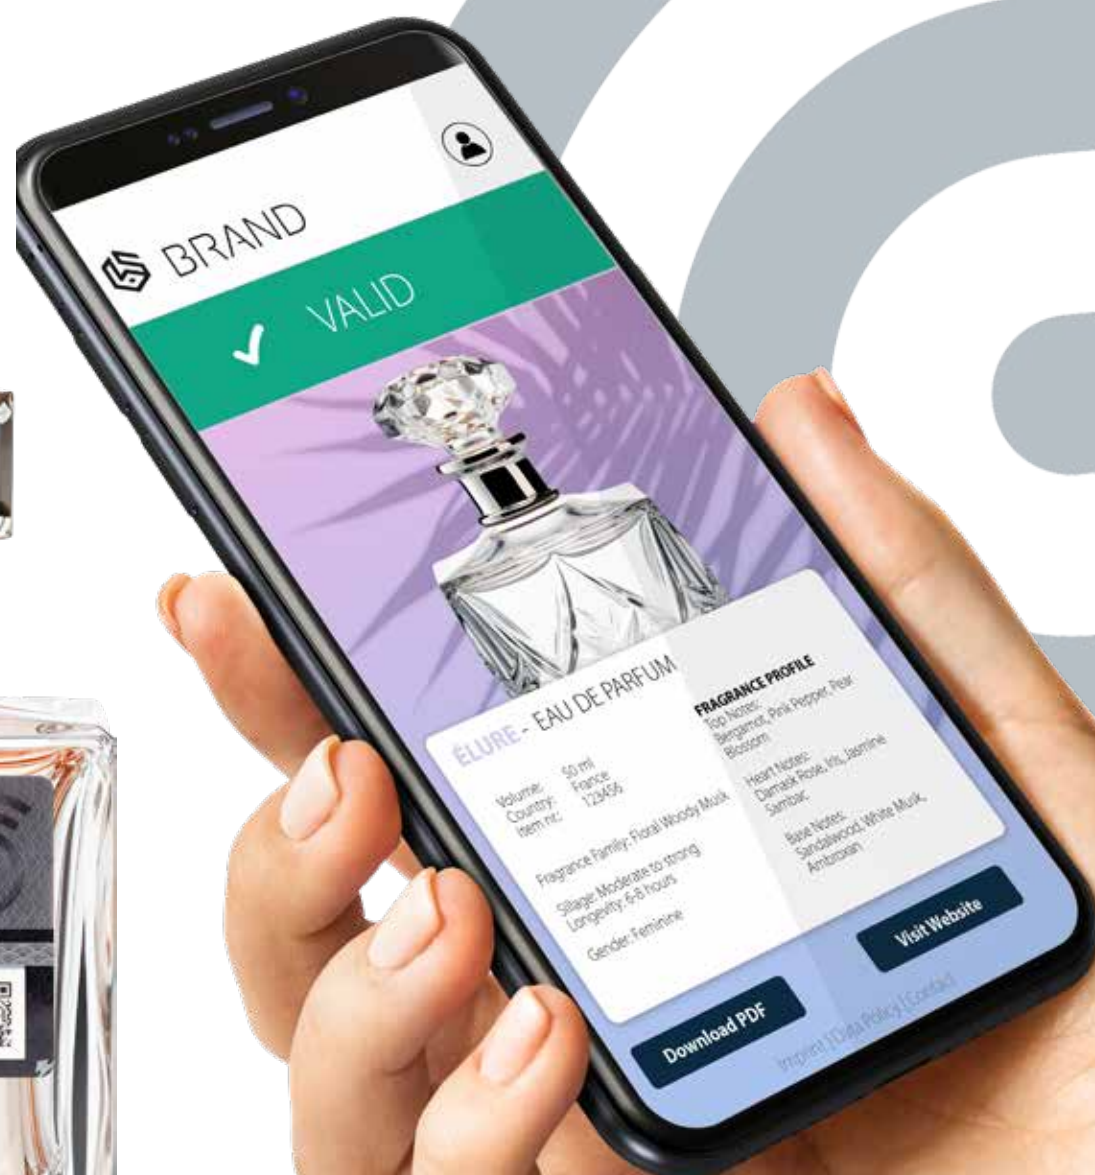

Rethinking Product Protection
in Complex Supply Chains

SECURIKETT®

A simple seal may signal integrity...

...a SecurityLabel
proves it!

The Limitation of a Simple Closure Seal

A conventional seal primarily serves as a physical barrier. It merely indicates whether a package appears unopened.

It does not verify authenticity or ensure supply chain integrity.

SECURIKETT®

In regulated global supply chains, this level of protection is no longer sufficient to meet authentication, traceability, and compliance requirements...

What Defines a SecurityLabel?

SecurityLabels integrate multiple functional layers that extend beyond visual protection.

They combine:

- Tamper evidence
- Unique serialization
- Authentication features

SECURIKETT®

These features transform a label
from a passive indicator into an active security component....

Tamper Evidence

Tamper-evident SecurityLabels are engineered to provide irreversible, physical evidence of interference.

Unlike a simple seal, they:

- Reveal manipulation attempts immediately
- Leave visible traces
- Cannot be reapplied without detection

SECURIKETT®

This enables verifiable tamper detection rather than visual assumption...

Serialization

Unique serialization assigns each individual unit a distinct identity.

This enables:

- Item-level traceability
- Controlled aggregation hierarchies
- Targeted recalls
- Supply chain visibility

SECURIKETT®

Serialization protects each individual product, not just its packaging...

Authentication

Technical authentication mechanisms allow verification beyond visual inspection.

Depending on the security level required, this may include:

- Overt features: holograms, guilloches, effect colors, and other visually recognizable elements
- Covert or forensic features: nanotexts, invisible inks, and other hidden markers
- Digital verification elements: QR codes, NFC/RFID

SECURIKETT®

Authentication

provides measurable proof - not just visual appearance....

SECURIKETT®

A simple seal signals closure...

...a SecurityLabel
provides verifiable
control over product authenticity and tracability.
